

I combine experiments, computation and theory with the aim of identifying and understanding fundamental principles of biological self-organization. In my PhD at EMBL Heidelberg I studied migration and morphogenesis in the zebrafish lateral line primordium. After a sabbatical year in theoretical research, I recently started a postdoc at UCL to investigate the role of cell shape in cell fate decisions.