

Our lab is interested in how cells move and organize themselves into the stereotyped 3D tissue structures that are essential for proper organ function. Specifically, we aim to determine the cellular and molecular mechanisms governing tissue morphogenesis in the vertebrate eye, by combining multidimensional time lapse imaging, zebrafish molecular genetics, and our own MATLAB-based tools to extract quantitative information from imaging data sets.